Poem Generator

Idea 1: true or false

Long page. Scrolling to the right will be needed in order to view the poem as it appears. When the page is loaded the beginning of the poem is visible and followed by a some kind of symbol (dot, line). When clicking on it, a true or false personal question will appear: right now you feel anxiety, you haven't cleaned your home in days, you wish you were in a relationship etc. For each answer (true or false), there will be a few possible words, and one of them will appear as the continuation of the poem. The mood of the final poem that will appear will depend on the answers of the users. Similarly, the visual presentation will depend on the answers. The background will be a combination of black and white. It will begin as grey. Each time the "positive" answer to the question is chosen, the background will be a tone of white lighter, whereas for the "negative" answer it will be a tone darker.

Blah blah blah _____

Blah blah blah _____

(click)

you wish you were in a relationship   true   (click) false

Blah blah blah

Blah blah blah bleh blih bloh _____

Idea 2: size

A poem will already be visible on the page when the user loads it. The poem will change when the window is resized: the size of the letters will become smaller or bigger depending on how the window is resized and the words of the poem will change depending on the size. There will be a few window sizes set (that will trigger the change of words) and a few words for each size, but the size of the letters themselves will change as the window changes. The words will change in different ways so as to still be a poem with meaning in each window size. Perhaps the website could have multiple pages of poems. The poems could be about size: the size of "his" heart, the size of a country, "my" body size etc. (even if these words are not included as such in the poem, as I will use words from the fry words list). Depending on the content, a font and color that feels most appropriate will be used e.g. my body: a "chubby" font.

Idea 3: feelings

Multiple pages on website. Each one has a feeling. The parts of the poem become apparent when hovering over their blocks. The sequence in which they appear and are read in does not matter in terms of understanding the poem (chance). For each page/feeling, the words of the poem appear differently depending on the feeling (e.g. calmness, fear-for the calmness page the parts will slowly appear when hovering over the blocks, but for the fear one they will appear suddenly and keep appearing/disappearing like a broken light bulb). Colors as backgrounds (e.g. black for fear, lilac for calmness) will visually reinforce the concept. To get from one feeling/page to the other, there will be words in each poem that will correspond to the rest of the pages.

Idea 4: emojis

One long page. To move across it one needs to scroll to the right. Selected words of the poem will be replaced by emojis that have different meanings. Depending on the meaning of the emoji that the user chooses, a word out of 3 similar ones will appear in the spot. The emojis that appear next in the poem as well as the background (mood) of the page will depend on the choices of the user.

Blah blah blah bleh blih bloh 💚 🐌 💩

3 words for each